As part of Carillion’s sustainability Week 2005 two schools local to the Brentford office came into Westlink House and took part in a Sustainability Debate the subject of which was “Will Things change without legislation?”.

The Green School for Girls speakers were Helen Fenton and Vanessa Gyedu-Asante, who won the prize for the best team effort and the boys from Longford Community School were Jaturong Chareonying and Robert Andrew. Jaturong (“Sam”) won the award for best individual speaker.

The schools took turns to field their “for” and “against” speakers and there were some very spirited and forceful arguments put forward by the students leaving the judges with a difficult decision to make. The judges were Chris Lorraine, David Taylor and Anna Hutton-North.

The overwhelming opinion of the 25 or so Carillion employees who attended the event was that things would not change without legislation.

Don Kenny presented the winners with their prizes after which the students and their teachers were given a tour of the building.

Attendance at the debate was excellent
